The power of the table.

But first, we eat!

The world we desire is possible.

Every human being relates to the table. The table is where we reclaim our humanity.

And no matter our differences - where we grew up, how much money we have, or the color of our skin - we all belong at the table. And when we eat together - we connect, bond and acknowledge our deepest desires and need to be seen, known and belong. In a world of disconnection, there is no more powerful place than the shared meal.

Imagine a world where each of us have two or three loyal and empathetic friends - with us through the joys and the dark? Imagine employees in a company who have dinner together after work because they feel included and ignited in their whole selves, united in purpose and mission? Imagine a cross-section of people representing the diversity of the city collaborating on solving our greatest issues by first eating, sharing stories and laughing? Instead of protesting, eating! Instead of projects, presence. Instead of isolating, invitation!

We are made for connection. And when we feel like we belong - we thrive, we feel secure and we flourish. So first, we eat!

A Table Is

A single, long table where people of all walks of life and diversities share a meal.

When we eat together, the table reveals our shared humanity and fundamental sameness and holds the explosive potential to increase our sense of belonging, cultivate understanding and honor our differences.

At the table, without distractions, sitting face to face, we can feel seen, heard and known.

Kevin J. Beaty

At each table, a cross-section of people of all diversities are intentionally invited by hosts. Beautifully set with real place settings and decorations and slow-cooked food, guests feel seen, valued and humanized. Intentional conversation moves guests beyond the superficial and into a realization we are much more alike than different.

The Impact of the Table

Like slow-cooked food, the table nourishes and impacts deeply.

Our overall mission is to inspire and equip everyday people to set tables in their neighborhoods, where they work, where they worship, where they play.

After 50+ tables, we have hundreds of stories reflecting meaningful impact - new friendships, job connections and greater awareness of others and their culture through shared conversation and storytelling.

The Mile Long Table will launch what may become our city's most powerful and impactful gathering, as well as place of pride and joy as we cultivate a citywide movement toward reconnection and true inclusivity.

Through our strategic partners, Super-Hosts and Co-Hosts, we will continue to inspire and impact companies, neighborhoods and organizations through forming and supporting leaders who will set both literal and figurative tables for their people.

Why Set a Mile Long Table?

Our Vision

To see cities, companies and organizations everywhere become places where people experience true connection and belonging.

We have a big dream to set really long tables to inspire and reconnect our city. The Mile-Long Table will be both a symbolic and practical display of our increasing solidarity, connection and care for the humans of Denver and destined to both model and inspire the nation toward creating cities of belonging.

This groundbreaking event will be an elaborate display of solidarity and connection between people of all diversities, at a table unique to who we are as a city.

More than our altitude, we believe these tables will reflect and breathe new life into our deep-rooted history of diversity and pioneering, while taking small steps toward reconciling the pain of racism and prejudice still experienced in our city.

We hope to be a city who models for the rest of the nation a way forward toward meaningful connection and respect for one another, while inspiring a rediscovery of the shared meal for all who watch.

Let's set this table!
